To Jane Freilicher
To the Harbormaster

I wanted to be sure to reach you, though my ship was on the way it got caught in some moorings. I am always tying up and then deciding to depart. In storms and at sunset, with the metallic coils of the tide around my fathomless arms, I am unable to understand the forms of my vanity or I am hard alee with my Polish rudder in my hand and the sun sinking. To you I offer my hull and the tattered cordage of my will. The terrible channels where the wind drives me against the brown lips of the reeds are not all behind me. Yet I trust the sanity of my vessel; and if it sinks, it may well be in answer to the reasoning of the eternal voices, the waves which have kept me from reaching you.
Poem

The eager note on my door said “Call me, call when you get in!” so I quickly threw a few tanglettes into my overnight bag, straightened my eyelids and shoulders, and headed straight for the door. It was autumn by the time I got around the corner, oh all unwilling to be either pertinent or bemused, but the leaves were brighter than grass on the sidewalk!

Funny, I thought, that the lights are on this late and the hall door open; still up at this hour, a champion jiu-jitsu player like himself? Oh fie! for shame! What a host, so zealous! And he was there in the hall, flat on a sheet of blood that ran down the stairs. I did appreciate it. There are few hosts who so thoroughly prepare to greet a guest only casually invited, and that several months ago.

To the Film Industry in Crisis

Not you, lean quartiles and swarthy periodicals with your studious incursions toward the pomposity of ants, nor you, experimental theatre in which Emotive Eruption is wedging Poetic Insight perpetually, nor you, promenading Grand Opera, obvious as an ear (though you are close to my heart), but you, Motion Picture Industry, it's you I love!

In times of crisis, we must all decide again and again whom we love. And give credit where it's due: not to my starched nurse, who taught me how to be bad and not bad rather than good (and has lately availed herself of this information), not to the Catholic Church which is at best an over-scrupulous introduction to cosmic entertainment, not to the American Legion, which hates everybody, but to you, glorious Silver Screen, tragic Technicolor, amorous Cinemascope, stretching VistaVision and startling Stereophonic Sound, with all your heavenly dimensions and reverberations and iconoclasts! To Richard Barthes. To the "toff" boy barefoot and in pants, Jeanette MacDonald of the flaming hair and lips and long, long neck, Sue Carroll as she sits for eternity on the damaged fender of a car and smiles, Ginger Rogers with her pageboy bob like a sausage on her shuffling shoulders, peach-melba-voiced Fred Astaire of the feet, Eric Von Stroheim, the seducer of mountain-climbers' gasping spouses, the Tarzans, each and every one of you (I cannot bring myself to prefer Johnny Weissmuller to Lex Barker, I cannot!), Mae West in a furry sled, her bordello radiance and bland remarks, Rudolph Valentino of the moon, its crushing passions, and moon-like, too, the gentle Norma Shearer, Miriam Hopkins dropping her champagne glass off Joel McCrea's yacht and crying into the dappled sea, Clark Gable rescuing Gene Tierney from Russia and Allan Jones rescuing Kitty Carlisle from Harpo Marx, Cornel Wilde coughing blood on the piano keys while Merle Oberon berates, Marilyn Monroe in her little spike heels reeling through Niagara Falls, Joseph Cotten puzzling and Orson Welles puzzled and Dolores del Rio eating orchids for lunch and breaking mirrors, Gloria Swanson reclining, and Jean Harlow reclining and wiggling, and Alice Faye reclining and wiggling and singing, Myrna Loy being calm and wise, William Powell in his stunning urbaneity, Elizabeth Taylor blooming, yes, to you and to all you others, the great, the neargreat, the featured, the extras who pass quickly and return in dreams saying your one or two lines, my love! Long may you illumine space with your marvellous appearances, delays and enunciations, and may the money of the world glitteringly cover you as you rest after a long day under the kleig lights with your faces in packs for our edification, the way the clouds come often at night but the heavens operate on the star system. It is a divine precedent you perpetuate! Roll on, reels of celluloid, as the great earth rolls on!
Poem

At night Chinamen jump on Asia with a thump while in our willful way we, in secret, play affectionate games and bruise our knees like China's shoes.

The birds push apples through graft the moon turns blue, these apples roll beneath our buttocks like a heath full of Chinese thrushes flushed from China's bushes.

As we love at night
birds sing out of sight, Chinese rhythms beat through us in our heart, the apples and the birds move us like soft words, we couple in the grace of that mysterious race.

Yippee! she is shooting in the harbor! he is jumping up to the maelstrom! she is leaning over the giant's cart of tears which like a lava cone let fall to fly from the cross-eyed tantrum-tossed ninth grader's splayed flat is freezing on the cement! he is throwing up his arms in heavenly desperation, spacious Y of his tumultuous love-nerves flailing like a polinetta in its own manic storm against the glass door of the cumulus which is withholding her from those divine pastures she has filled with the flesh of men as stones!
O fatal eagerness!

2

O boy, their childhood was like so many oatmeal cookies.
I need you, you need me, yum, yum. Anon it became suddenly

3

like someone always losing something and never knowing what.
Always so. They were so fond of eating bread and butter and sugar, they were slobs, the mice used to lick the floorboards after they went to bed, rolling their light tails against the rasiling marbles of granulation. Vivo! the dextrose those children consumed, lavished, smoked, in their knobby candy bars. Such pimples! such hardons! such moody loves.
And thus they grew like giggling fir trees.

Les Etiquettes jaunes

I picked up a leaf
today from the sidewalk.
This seems childish.

Leaf! you are so big!
How can you change your color, then just fall?

As if there were no such thing as integrity!

You are too relaxed to answer me. I am too frightened to insist.

Leaf! don't be neurotic like the small chameleon.
Aus einem April

We dust the walls.
And of course we are weeping larks falling all over the heavens with our shoulders clasped in someone's armpits, so tightly! and our throats are full.
Haven't you ever fallen down at Christmas and didn't it move everyone who saw you?
Isn't that what the tree meant? the pure pleasure of making weep those whom you cannot move by your flights!
It's enough to drive one to suicide.
And the rooftops are falling apart like the applause of rough, long-nailed, intimate, roughened-by-kisses, hands.
Fingers more breathless than a tongue laid upon the lips in the hour of sunlight, early morning, before the mist rolls in from the sea; and out there everything is turbulent and green.

River

Whole days would go by, and later their years, while I thought of nothing but its darkness drifting like a bridge against the sky.
Day after day I dreamily sought its melancholy, its searchings, its soft banks enfolded me, and upon my lengthening neck its kiss was murmuring like a wound. My very life became the inhalation of its weedy ponderings and sometimes in the sunlight my eyes, swelled in water, would glimpse the pathway to the great sea. For it was there I was being borne.
Then for a moment my strengthening arms would cry out upon the leafy crest of the air like whitecaps, and lightning, swift as pain, would go through me on its way to the forest, and I'd sink back upon that brutal tenderness that bore me on, that held me like a slave in its liquid distances of eyes, and one day, though weeping for my caresses, would abandon me, moment of infinitely salty air! sun fluttering like a signal! upon the open flesh of the world.
Poem

to James Schuyler

There I could never be a boy, though I rode like a god when the horse reared.
As a cry from mother I fell to my knees! there I fell, clumsy and sick and good, though I bloomed on the back of a frightened black mare who had leaped windily at the start of a leaf and she never threw me.

I had a quick heart and my thighs churned her back.
I loved her fright, which was against me into the air! and the diamond white of her forelock which seemed to smart with thoughts as my heart smarted with life!
and she'd toss her head with the pain and paw the air and champ the bit, as if I were Endymion and she, moon-like, hated to love me.

All things are tragic when a mother watches!
and she wishes upon herself the random fears of a scarlet soul, as it breathes in and out and nothing chokes, or breaks from triumph to triumph!

I knew her but I could not be a boy, for in the billowing air I was fleet and green riding blackly through the etereal night towards men's words which I gracefully understood, On Rachmaninoff's Birthday

Blue windows, blue rooftops and the blue light of the rain, these contiguous phrases of Rachmaninoff pouring into my enormous ears and the tears falling into my blindness for without him I do not play, especially in the afternoon on the day of his birthday. Good fortunes, you would have been my teacher and I your only pupil and I would always play again.

Secrets of Liszt and Scriabin whispered to me over the keyboard on unsmiling afternoons! and growing still in my stormy heart.

Only my eyes would be blest as I played and you rapped my knuckles, dearer farther of all the Russians, placing my fingers tenderly upon your cold, tired eyes.

The Hunter

He set out and kept hunting and hunting. Where, he thought and thought, is the real chamois?
and can I kill it where it is?

He had brought with him only a dish of pears. The autumn wind soared above the trails where the drops of the chamois led him further.
The leaves dropped around him like pie-plates. The stars fell one by one into his eyes and burnt.

There is a geography which holds its hands just so far from the breast and pushes you away, crying so.
He went on to strange hills where the stones were still warm from feet, and then on and on. There were clouds at his knees, his eyelashes had grown thick from the colds, as the fur of the bear does in winter. Perhaps, he thought, I am asleep, but he did not freeze to death.

There were little green needles everywhere. And then manna fell.
He knew, above all, that he was now approved, and his strength increased.
He saw the world below him, brilliant as a flood, and steaming with gold, with distance. There were occasionally rifts in the cloud where the face of a woman appeared, frowning. He had gone higher. He wore ermine.
He thought, why did I come? and then, I have come to rule! The chamois came.

The chamois found him and they came in droves to humiliate him. Alone, in the clouds, he was humiliated.

For Grace, After a Party

You do not always know what I am feeling, Last night in the warm spring air while I was blasting my cradle against someone who doesn’t interest
me, it was love for you that set me afire,
and isn’t it odd? for in rooms full of strangers my most tender feelings writhe and bear the fruit of screaming. Put out your hand, isn’t there an ashrey, suddenly, there? beside the bed? And someone you love enters the room and asks wouldn’t you like the eggs a little different today?
And when they arrive they are just plain scrambled eggs and the warm weather is holding.
On Looking at "La Grande Jatte," the Czar Wept Anew

He paces the blue rug. It is the end of summer, the end of his excursions in the sun. He may now close his eyes as if they were tired flowers and feel no sense of duty towards the corridor, the rechercéd, the trees; they are all on his face, a lumpy portrait, a painted desert. He is crying. Only a few feet away the grass is green, the rug he sees is grass; and people fetch each other in and out of shadows there, chuckling and symmetrical.

The sun has left him wide-eyed and alone, hysterical for snow, the blinding bed, the gun. "Flowers, flowers, flowers!" he sneers, and echoes fill the spongy trees. He cannot, after all, walk up the wall. The skylight is sealed. For why? for a change in the season, for a refurbishing of the house. He wonders if, when the music is over, he should not take down the drapes, take up the rug, and join his friends out there near the lake, right here beside the lake! "O friends of my heart!" and they will welcome him with open umbrellas, fig bars, handmade catapulls! Despite the card that came addressed to someone else, the sad fisherman of Puvis, despite his own precious ignorance and the wild temper of the people, he'll try!

Now, sitting in the brown satin chair, he plans a little meal for friends. So! the steam rising from his Pullman kitchen fogs up all memories of Seurat, the lake, the summer; these are over for the moment, beyond the guests, the cooking sherry and the gin; such is the palate for sporadic chitchat and meat. But as the cocktail warms his courageous cocktails he lays the dinner burn, his eyes widen with sleet, like a cloudburst fell the summer, the lake and the voices! He steps into the mirror, refusing to be anyone else, and his guests observe the waves break.

He must send a telegram from the Iza Palace, although he knows the muskrats don't read: "If I am ever to find these trees meaningful I must have you by the hand. As it is, they stretch dusty fingers into an obscure sky, and the snow looks up like a face dirtied with tears. Should I cry out and see what happens? There could only be a stranger wandering in this landscape, cold, unfortunate, himself frozen fast in wintry eyes." Explicit Rex.
Romanze, or The Music Students

The rain, its tiny pressure on your scalp, like ants passing the door of a tobacconist.
“Hello!” they cry, their noses glistening. They are humming a scherzo by Tchaikovsky.
They are carrying violin cases.
With their feathery knitting over their heads the blue air, they appear at the door of the Conservatory and cry “Ah!” at the honey of its outpourings.
They stand in the street and hear the curds drifting on the top of the milk of Conservatory doors.

2

They had thought themselves in Hawaii when suddenly the pines, trembling with nightfulness, shook them out of their stolidity.
The surf was full of outriggers racing like slits in the eye of the sun, yet the surf was full of great black logs plunging, and then the surf was full of needles.

3

The surf was bland and white, as pine trees are white when,
in Paradise, no wind is blowing.

3

In Ann Arbor on Sunday afternoon at four-thirty they went to an organ recital: Messiaen, Hindemith, Czerny.
And in their ears a great voice said “To have great music we must commission it. To commission great music we must have great commissioners.” There was a blast! and summer was over.

Rienzi! A rabbit is sitting in the hedge! it is a brown stone! it is the month of October! it is an orange bason!
They’ve been standing on this mountain for forty-eight hours without flinching.
Well, they are soldiers, I guess, and it is all marching magnificently by.
The Three-Penny Opera

I think a lot about the Peacocks: Polly and all the rest are free and fair. Her jewels have price tags in case they want to change hands, and her pets are carnivorous. Even the birds.

Whenever our splendid hero Mackie Messer, what an honest man! steals or kills, there is meaning for you! Oh Mackie’s knife has a false handle so it can express its meaning as well as his. Mackie’s not one to impose his will. After all who does own any thing?

But Polly, are you a shadow? Is Mackie projected to me by light through film? If I’d been in Berlin in 1930, would I have seen you ambling the streets like Krazy Kat?

Oh yes. Why,

when Mackie speaks we only know what he means occasionally. His sentence is an image of the times. You’d have seen all of us masquerading. Chipper, but not so well arranged. Airing old poodles and pre-war furs in narrow shoes with rhinestone bows. Silent, heavily perfumed. Back around the eyes. You wouldn’t have known who was who, though. Those were intricate days.
A Terrestrial Cuckoo

What a hot day it is! for Jane and me above the scorch of sun on jungle waters to be paddling up and down the Essequibo in our canoe of war-surplus gondola parts.

We enjoy it, though: the bats squeak in our wrestling hair, parakeets bungle lightly into gorges of blossom, the water's full of gunk and what you might call waterlilies if you're silly as we. Our intuitive craft our striped T shirts and shorts cry out to vines that are feasting on flies to make straight the way of tropical art. "I'd give a lempira or two to have it all slapped onto a canvas" says Jane. "How like lazy flamingos look the floating weeds! and the infundibuliform corolla on our right's a harmless Charybdis!

or am I seduced by its ambient mauve?" The nose of our vessel sneezes into a bundle of amaryllis, quite artificially tied with ribbon.
Are there people nearby? and postcards?

We, essentially travellers, frown and backwater. What will the savages think if our friends turn up? with sunglasses and cuneiform decoders! probably. Oh Jane, is there no more frontier?

We strip off our pretty blazers of tups and dive like salamanders into the vernal stream Alas! they have left the jungle aside, and in friendly chatter of Kozebue and Saloni our friends swiftly retreat downstream on a flowery float. We strike through the tongues and tigers hotly, towards orange mountains, black taboos, dada and clouds. To return with absolute treasure! our only penchant, that. And a red-billed toucan, pointing t'aurora highlands and caravanserais of junk, cries out "New York is everywhere like Paris! go back when you're sick, behung with lice!" Jane Awake

The opals hiding in your lids as you sleep, as you ride ponies mysteriously, spring to bloom like the blue flowers of autumn each nine o'clock. And curls tumble languorously towards the yawning rubber band, tan, your hand pressing all that (routes) black sleep into the quiet form of daylight and its sunny disregard for the luminous volutions, oh!

and the budding waltzes we swoop through in nights.
Before dawn you roar with your eyes shut, unsmiling. your volcanic flesh hides everything from the watchman, and the tendrils of dreams strangle policemen running by too slowly to escape you, the racing vertiginous waves of your murmuring need. But he is day's guardian saint that policeman, and leaning from your open window you ask him what dress to wear and how to comb your hair modestly, for that is now your mode.

Only by chance tripping on stairs do you repeat the dance, and then, in the perfect variety of subdued, impeccably disguised, white black pink blue saffron and golden ambience, do we find the nightly savage, in a trance.
A Mexican Fandango

Actors with their variety of voices and nuns, those arch campaign-managers, were pacing the campo in contrasting colors as Jane and I muttered a red fandango.

A cloud flung Jane's skirt in my face and the neighborhood boys saw such sights as mortal eyes are usually denied. Arabian day! she clicked her rhinestone heels! vistas of lace!

Our shouting knocked over a couple of palm trees and the gaping sky seemed to reel at our mistakes. such purple flashing insteps and careers! which bit with lavish envy the northern soldiers.

Then loud startling deliberation! Violet peered, hung with silver trinkets, from an adobe slit, escorted by a famished movie star, beau ideal! crooning that dejected ballad, Anne the Strip.

"Give me back my mink!" our Violet cried "and cut out the heroics! I'm from Boston, remember." Jane and I plotz! what a mysterioastebe!
the fandango died on our lips, a wintry fan.

And all that evening eating peanut: paste and onions we chattered, and of films and the film industry and how ballet is dying. And our feet ached. Violet burst into tears first, she is always in the nick of time.

Chez Jane

The white chocolate jar full of petals swills odds and ends around in a dizzying eye of four o'clocks now and to come. The tiger, marvellously striped and irritable, leaps on the table and without disturbing a hair of the flowers' breathless attention, pines into the pot, right down its delicate spout.
A whisper of steam goes up from that porcelain eurhythra. "Saint-Saëns!" it seems to be whispering, curling unerringly around the furry moustache of the terrible pug, who is mentally flexing.
Ah be with me always, spirit of noisy contemplation in the studio, the Garden of Zoes, the eternally fixed afternoons.
There, while music scratches its scrofulous stomach, the brute heart emerges and stands, clear and careful, knowing always the exact peril at this moment caressing his fangs with a tongue given wholly to luxurious usages; which only a moment before dropped aspirin in this sunset of roses, unc now throws a chair in the air to aggravate the truly menacing.
Two Variations

Suddenly that body appears: in my smoke while someone's heavily describing Greece, that famous monotonous line feels white against the inside glooms of life and I seem intimate with what I merely touch.

1

Now I am not going to face things because I am not a start nor fall asleep against a heart that doesn't burn the wolves away, hunting and virtue beside an open fire.
And you know if I drift into the sky it will be heavy as surf.

2

I'm glad that the rock is heavy and that it feels all right in my heart like an eye in a pot of humus.
Let's write long letters on grand themes, fish sandwiches, egg sandwiches and cheese; or travelling in Mexico, Italy and Australia.
I eat a lot so I won't get drunk and then I drink a lot so I'll feel excited and then I've gone away I don't know where or with whom and can't remember whom from except that I'm back with my paper bag and next time my face won't come with me.

Ode

An idea of justice may be precious, one vital Gregory's amusement...

What are you amused by? a crisis like a cow being put on the payroll with the concomitant investigations and divinings?
Have you swept the dung from the tracks?
Am I a door?

If millions criticize you for drinking too much, the cow is going to look like Venus and you'll make a pass yes, you and your friend from High School, the basketball player whose black eyes exceed yours as he picks up the ball with one hand.
But doesn't he doubt, too?

To be equal? it's the worst!
Are we just middy instant?

No, you must treat me like a fox; or, being a child, killing the ombre though it reminds you of me.
Thus you become the author of all being. Women unite against you.

It's as if I were carrying a horse on my shoulders and I couldn't see his face. His iron legs hung down to the earth on either side of me like the arch of triumph in Washington Square.
I would like to beat someone with him but I can't get him off my shoulders, he's like evening.
Evening! your breeze is an obstacle, it changes me. I am being arrested, and if I mock you into a face and, disgusted, throw down the horse—ah! there’s his face! and I am, sobbing, walking on my heart.

I want to take your hands off my hips and put them on a statue’s hips; then I can thoughtfully regard the justice of your feelings for me, and, changing, regard my own love for you as beautiful. I’d never cheat you and say “it’s inevitable!” It’s just barely natural.
But we do course together like two battleships maneuvering away from the fleet.
I am moved by the multitudes of your intelligence and sometimes, returning, I become the sea—in love with your speed, your heaviness and breath.

Invincibility

"In the church of my heart the choir is on fire!"
—Vladimir Mayakovsky

1

Avarice, the noose that lets oil, oh my dear oh "La Ronde," erase what is assured and ours, it resurrects nothing, finally, in its eagerness to sit under the widely spaced stairs. to be a fabulous toilette; doesn’t imitate footsteps of disappearance

The neighbor, having teased peace to retire, soon averages six flowering fountains, ooh! spare the men and their nervous companions that melt and ripen to a sordid harbor of squid-slipping tarpaulin strips. quit the sordid aroor of community butchers’ girth

The jumping error pins hate on the blossoms of baffles, densely foraging covered hero-Nero of Maltress, of Moor, leap, oh leap! against the fame that’s in the noose, sister of yearning, of eulogies without overcosts deeply, and the trumpet rages over the filigreed prisoners

Now salutes forth the joyousness of being cruel which is singing of the world needed by the paralyzed wind, seated and rebeginning, mounting without saying adieu, ever again delicately to entomb a tear, that mark of suffering in the toughness of the forest Lepers nest on the surly cats of glistening delirium, feet of fire drowning in the attitude of relinquishing foreheads
remember always the barrier so cupidity deflected, no spume breezy enough for the tempestuous sabers sent reeling into the charades of fears of the noble

A crisis questions its attendants in the eyelid of Venezia so serious are the latitudes of a heart turned into a chair and the fire-escapes tend to ferment against the psalmist's cheek of love that's advancing into a maelstrom for a true speech, succoring the lowlaid paupers deliberately, spear-like, the pearl hesitating to come near the arid well

Noone arriving tropically masterful, estimating and caught, let the crouching ferns release their nascent sonatas and, shaking with a remuneration of ficklecountrysides, ent the rum that cruises an immortally non-sequitur finish, quaint, and having an aspiration as of torrents and cataclysms

Touched by the insensitivity that broods over the boats, oh halos of startling carpers, canoes and lathes! archers!
a January of feeling seats itself before the young soldiers and laugh and laughs at those arch-guardians' radiance, particularly the sneer of fate, habit shaking its white fists

2

Now for some hell, you make a few fast purchases separated by first nights of yoyo-cartwheel-violences, il but yelling and running full of the younger luminosity, soulful, oh and epic and sort of rouged between the shoulder blades!
which the striding has not succeeded in making a gondola yet
and this has so devastated the murmuring contributions of strangers
in suits under the brilliant heather, although, my soul: it's white it's painted white as the rain! and have you not taught for clarity,
for that sweet sake, the worldly dream of the son marching outward always? and whispering of sins in the green clouds

An eagerness for the historical look of the mirror, the dry smile of knowledge which is faithlessness apologising to the Sphinx, and is it not a great fury of horsemen who make a guided tour of the future and its glass-like tortures?
the odor of evening vibrating across that linear nostalgia and vouchsafing a plume and a volume of Plato, purblind water, the earth pitting its stench against the moon's and accomplishing a serenade, a terrestrial touchdown sigh in the silence which is not yet formidable or ominous, resenting the leaves and not yet geared to the undercutting foam

Poem in January

March, the fierce! like a wind of garters its calm kept secret, as if eaten!
and sipped at the source tainted, taut.

Vagrants, crushed by such effulgence, wrap their mild twigs and bruises in straws and touch themselves tightly, like buttered bees, for the sun is cold, there, as an eyeglass playing with its freshly running sinuses, swampy, and of a molasses sweetness on the cheek.

Turn, oh turn! your pure divining rod for the sake of infantile suns and their railing and storming at the deplorably pale checks and the hemlocks not yet hung up.

Do we live in old, sane, sensible cries?
The guards stand up and down like a waltz and its strains are stolen by fauns with their wounded feet nevertheless dashing away through the woods, for the iris! for autumn!

Oh pure blue of a footstep, have you stolen March? and, with your cupidsitous baton struck agog? do you feel that you have, blue?

Ah, March! you have not decided whom you train.
Or what traitors are waiting for you to be born, oh March! or what it will mean in terms of diet.

Take my clear big eyes into your heart, and then pump my clear big eyes through your bloodstream, and!
stick my clear big eyes on your feet, it is cold,

I am all over snowshoes and turning round and round. There's a trail of blood through the wood and a few shreds of faun-colored hair.

I am troubled as I salute the crocus.
There shall be no more reclining on the powdered roads, your veins are using up the redness of the world.

Meditations in an Emergency

Am I to become profligate as if I were a blonde? Or religious as if I were French?

Each time my heart is broken it makes me feel more adventurous (and how the same names keep recurring on that interminable list!), but one of these days there'll be nothing left with which to venture forth.

Why should I share you? Why don't you get rid of someone else for a change?

I am the least difficult of men. All I want is boundless love.

Even trees understand me! Good heavens, I lie under them, too, don't I? I'm just like a pile of leaves.

However, I have never clogged myself with the praises of pastoral life, nor with nostalgia for an innocent past of perverted acts in pastures. No. One need never leave the confines of New York to get all the greenery one wishes—I can't even enjoy a blade of grass unless I know there's a subway handy, or a record store or some other sign that people do not totally regret life. It is more important to affirm the least sincere; the clouds get enough attention as it is and even they continue to pass. Do they know what they're missing? Uh huh.

My eyes are vague blue, like the sky, and change all the time; they are indiscriminate but fleeting, entirely specific and disloyal, so that no one trusts me. I am always looking away. Or again at something after it has given me up. It makes me restless and that makes me unhappy, but I cannot keep them still. If only I had grey, green, black, brown, yellow eyes; I would stay at home and do something. It's not that I'm curious. On the contrary, I am bored but it's my duty to be attentive, I am needed by things as the sky must be above the earth. And lately, so great has their anxiety become, I can spare myself little sleep.

Now there is only one tran I love to kiss when he is unshaven. Heterosexuality! yous are inexorably approaching. (How discourage her?)

St. Seraphim, I wrap myself in the robes of your whiteness which is like midnight in Dostoevsky. How am I to become a legend, my dear? I've tried love, but that hides you in the bosom of another and I am always springing forth from it like the lotus—the ecstasy of always bursting forth! (but one must not be distracted by it!) or like a lycanthrop, "to keep the filth of life away," yes, there, even in the heart, where the filth is pumped in and slanders and pollutes and determines. I will my will, though I may become famous for a mysterious vacancy in that department, that greenhouse.

Destroy yourself, if you don't know!

It is easy to be beautiful; it is difficult to appear so. I admire you, beloved, for the trap you've set. It's like a final chapter no one reads because the plot is over.
"Fanny Brown is run away—scampered off with a Coat of Horse; I do love that little Mina, & hope She may be happy, tho' She has vexed me by this Exploit a little too. —Poor silly Cecchins! or F: B: as we used to call her. —I wish She had a good Whipping and 10,000 pounds." —Mrs. Thrale.

I've got to get out of here. I choose a piece of shawl and my dirtiest suntans. I'll be back, I'll re-emerge, defeated, from the valley; you don't want me to go where you go, so I go where you don't want me to. It's only afternoon, there's a lor ahead. There won't be any mail downstairs. Turning, I spit in the lock and the knob turns.

For James Dean

Welcome me, if you will, as the ambassador of a hatred who knows its cause and does not envy you your whim of ending him.

For a young actor I am begging peace, gods. Alone in the empty streets of New York I am its dirty feet and head and he is dead.

He has banged into your wall of air, your hubris, racing towards your heights and you have cut him from your table which is built; how unfairly for us! not on trees, but on clouds.

I speak as one whose fifth is like his own, of pride and speed and your terrible example nearer than the siren's speech, a spirit eager for the punishment which is your only recognition.

Peace! to be true to a city of rats and to love the envy of the dreamy, smudged mouthers of an arcane dejection smoldering quietly in the perception of hopelessness and scandal at unnatural vigor. Their dreams are their own, as are the toilets of a great railway terminal and the sequins of a very small, very fat eyelid.

I take this for myself, and you take up the thread of my life between your teeth, tin thread and tarnished with abuse, you still shall hear as long as the beast in me maintains its taciturn power to close my lids in tears, and my loins move yet in the ennobling pursuit of all the worlds you have left me alone in, and would be the dolorous distraction from, while you summon your army of anguish which is a million hoisting blood vessels on the eyes and in the ears at that instant before death.

And
the menials who surrounded him critically, languidly waiting for a final imperience to rebel and enslave him, starlets and other glittering things in the hog-wallow, flapping myriad in their inane mush-like adoration of niggardly care and stagnant respects paid themselves, you spared, as a hospital preserves its orderlies.

Are these your latter-day saints, these unctuous starers, muscular somnambulists, these stages for which no word’s been written hollow enough, these exhibitionists in well-veiled booths, these navel-suckers?

Is it true that you high ones, celebrated among amorous flies, hated the prodigy and invention of his nerves?
To withhold your light from painstaking paths!
your love
should be difficult, as his was hard.

Nostrils of pain down avenues of luminous spirit-globes breathe in the fragrance of his innocent flesh like smoke, the temporary lift, the post-cancer excitement of vile manners and veil-thin lips, obscure in the carelessness of your scissors.

Men cry from the grave while they still live and now I am this dead man’s voice, stammering, a little in the earth.
I take up the nourishment of his pale green eyes, out of which I shall prevent flowers from growing, your flowers.
Sleeping on the Wing

Perhaps it is to avoid some great sadness, as in a Restoration tragedy the hero cries "Sleep!
O for a long sound sleep and so forget it!"
that one flies, soaring above the shoreless city, veering upward from the pavement as a pigeon does when a car honks or a door slams, the door of dreams, life perpetuated in parti-colored loves and beautiful lies all in different languages.

Fear drops away too, like the cement, and you are over the Atlantic. Where is Spain? where is who? The Civil War was fought to free the slaves, was it? A sudden down-draught reminds you of gravity and your position in respect to human love. But here is where the gods are, speculating, bemused.
Once you are helpless, you are free, can you believe that? Never to awaken to the sad struggle of a face? to travel always over some impersonal vastness, to be out of, forever, neither in nor for!

The eyes roll asleep as if turned by the wind and the lids flutter open slightly like a wing.
The world is an iceberg, so much is invisible! and was and is, and yet the form, it may be sleeping too. Those features etched in the ice of someone loved who died, you see a sculptor dreaming of space and speed, your hand alone could have done this.
Curiosity, the passionate hand of desire. Dead, or sleeping? Is there speed enough? And, swooping, Radio

Why do you play such dreary music on Saturday afternoon, when tired mortally tired I long for a little reminder of immorality? All week long while I trudge fatiguingly from desk to desk in the museum you spill your miracles of Grieg and Honegger on shut-ins. Am I not shut in too, and after a week of work don't I deserve Prokofiev?

Well, I have my beautiful de Kooning to aspire to. I think it has an orange bed in it, more than the ear can hold.
other than that the bridge reaches for.
Don't shoot until, the white of freedom glistening on your gun barrel, you see the general fear.

For Janice and Kenneth to Voyage

Love, love, love, honeymoon isn't used much in poetry these days and if I give you a bar of Palmolive Soap

it would be rather cracker-barrel of me, wouldn't it?

The winds will wash you out your hair, my dears.
Passions will become turrets, to you.

I'll be so afraid without you.
The penalty of the Big Town is the Big Stick,

yet when you were laughing nearby the monsters ignored me like a record-player and I felt brilliant to be so confident that the trees would walk back to Birnam Wood.

It was all you, your graceful white smiles like a French word, the one for nursery, the one for brine.
Mayakovsky

1

My heart's aflutter!
I am standing in the bath tub crying. Mother, mother who am I? If he will just come back once and kiss me on the face his coarse hair brush my temple, it's throbbing! then I can put on my clothes I guess, and walk the streets.

2

I love you, I love you, but I'm turning to my verses and my heart is closing like a fist.
Words! be sick as I am sick, swoon, roll back your eyes, a pool, and I'll stare down at my wounded beauty which at best is only a talent for poetry.

3

Cannot please, cannot charm or win what a poet!
and the clear water is thick with bloody blows on its head.
I embraced a cloud,
but when I soared
it rained.

4

That's funny! there's blood on my chest oh yes, I've been carrying bricks what a funny place to rupture! and now it is raining on the ailanthus as I step out onto the window ledge the tracks below me are smoky and glistening with a passion for running I leap into the leaves, green like the sea.

Now I am quietly waiting for the catastrophe of my personality to seem beautiful again, and interesting, and modern.

The country is grey and brown and white in trees, snows and skies of laughter always diminishing, less funny not just darker, not just grey.
It may be the coldest day of the year, what does he think of that? I mean, what do I? And if I do, perhaps I am myself again.
